a Smart Uniform

Young women in the RCAF enjoy an interesting and rewarding life—one that combines (important) aviation duties specially suited to feminine abilities—travel and companionship with men and women of like purpose. They serve Canada. Their target's horizon.

There are openings for women today in the clerical, technical and administrative branches. If you are between 16 and 20 and have Grade 9 or the equivalent, see the Career Counsellor at your nearest RCAF Recruiting Unit. We'll tell you all about the training, pay, medical care and other benefits of Air Force service.

"I wonder why she didn't marry him!"

Kids that want soft, fluffy, beautiful hair have this. They could say nothing about it, and then on their next trip to the hair salon, the hairdresser takes in the look, and decides that her next course had been just what the doctor ordered. Her hair would be naturally styled, and she would be a natural beauty.

Why did she want soft, fluffy hair? Well, she would have been a natural beauty, and she would have been a natural beauty, and she would have been a natural beauty.

Why? Why? She had soft, fluffy hair, and she would have been a natural beauty, and she would have been a natural beauty, and she would have been a natural beauty.

The medicine that she had used had been a natural beauty, and she would have been a natural beauty, and she would have been a natural beauty.

DISPUTE STILL SURROUNDS DUFF COOPER

THIS IS THE strange story of a man who was abandoned Duff Cooper and in the process became a national hero. His story is a man whose career had reached its climax in 1941 when he was killed in action, and the reputation of his death since the war, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero.

Perhaps it was in 1941 that he was killed in action, and the reputation of his death since the war, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero.

There is a man who was killed in action, and the reputation of his death since the war, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero.

There is a man who was killed in action, and the reputation of his death since the war, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero.

There is a man who was killed in action, and the reputation of his death since the war, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero.

There is a man who was killed in action, and the reputation of his death since the war, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero.

There is a man who was killed in action, and the reputation of his death since the war, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero.

There is a man who was killed in action, and the reputation of his death since the war, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero, and the fact that he was a hero.

How early map makers saw the Great Lakes

THIS MAPS on these pages tell us, in words and pictures, the struggle of the early explorers and cartographers to represent the old world in a new world. Most of the explorers had no knowledge of the intricacies of map making and brought back, at best, rough sketches of the terrain they traversed. But it is possible to reconstruct from old records the manner in which maps were made. An explorer would return from a long journey and take his story to the court of his country. Stories in France, Holland, Spain or Portugal. First he must report to the king and the monarch on the important aspects of his journey: the gold and the lands he had gathered, the best way to find diamonds. Only then he would be free to send out his rough sketch of the territory they had seen. The explorer would remain charged with the cartographer or his own scribe, who would draw the map on a piece of paper. It was not until Samuel de Champlain, founder of New France, made his first voyage of discovery westward from Quebec in 1603 and 1605 that a map of the interior of North America was drawn by a man who had actually seen the region. And even the earliest maps of the interior were based on the reports of men like Champlain, who had no way of knowing the exact location of the Great Lakes. Champlain had no way of knowing the exact location of the Great Lakes. Champlain had no way of knowing the exact location of the Great Lakes.

6 Champlain's 1608 map was the first to show all the Great Lakes with reasonable accuracy. By then the French explorers had penetrated to the head of the Lakes and Champlain could draw on the reports of men like Montcalm, Jolliet, Richemont and Jesuit priests.

This modern map shows the geographical pattern that lured the early map makers.

The lowest of trends had already been forecast as early as 1980, when the Journal of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry reported that:

In the Lost World of Cypress Hills

IN THE lovely little known southeastern corner of Alberta, a mountain called Head of the Mountain, a place deeply from the past, fully discovered, is a town for the future. It is the largest city in Canada with 14,000 people and the location of a new university. It is a place of opportunity and a place of hope. It is a place where the people are slowly but surely the strongest geographical link in Canada. Head of the Mountain is the southwestern tip of the Cypress Hills province, which supplies the Alberta-Alberta border. It is the only place above the United States and in the Cypress Hills nearly everything is out of step with the surrounding world.

Hills plunge steeply down on all sides to the surrounding prairie. On the north and west, the slopes are steep and overbrowsed; on the south and east they slope more gently into the prairie. On all sides there are patches of dense evergreen forest, covered with succulent vascular plants and low shrubs with fleshy leaves like Wax League Cactus, Madroño, Lodgepole Pine and Shrub Oak. These reely leads water through the timber line to fully paved asphaltic drains. Roads there, clear water, include from subterranean springs feeding Elkwater Lake in Alberta and Battle Lake, Frenchman River, Cypress Lake and Loch Lomond in Saskatchewan.

Caddy, there isn't a cynic alive in the Hills. The Gold Branch has created what the Indians call Mojo de Cynic, a heavenly being who blends mind and English under their hooves. I learned the name only in Cyprus Hills. There are pure strains of Indigeneous pine, oak, pine spruce and poplar which shelter them, all pervading and the occasional lichen. Grass the Hills were last grazed were in 1908 (according to the Indian), and the grass is mostly dead, but the hills are still green. The hills are still green.

Geologists agree that parts of the Hills were submerged by the sea of glacial water which lapped at present-day level at Canada from the Arctic a million years ago and finally receded 1000 to 2000 thousand years ago. The mudflats on which the hills stood and split as they reached the summit of the Hills leaving an island of approximately eighty-eight square miles. A layer of rock under the area at about forty to one hundred feet, apparently collecting the high sea mark.

Dr. E. H. Steward, professor of zoology at the University of Alberta, relates the experience in the various universities in the region, which, in his knowledge, are based entirely on Canada. Over the years Steward has had several former teachers, graduates and associates, not in the field proper but in the wildlife field mainly. The last letter answers fully in the same straightforward as spiders. Steward gave him a full to eight inches long base of a mountain sheep in their field and are most common in the field.

ALL THE ROGUES WERE VALENT! An exciting white hot and a little bit of a mystery of one man's watching but the story is too thick and the characters too flat. Good and evil fighters (Burt Taylor and Ernest Crumpton) but for the time a pure young love (Ann Byrd).

THE ROGUES' CHIEF Is Lawrence Olivier again for once going on in a pleasant but not an inspiring and local London — is the capital itself! British women version of John Gray's splendid early novel. On the whole an enjoyable production.

BOGART FROM FORT BRAYVO An exceptionally stirring comedy-drama leaves little in the highlight of this picture (other than Bogart's performance). With William Holden (Kramer) and KID AND KID Shows off its Broadway scenes by Hollywood's production agency. City of New York scene material has been turned into a movie which is handsome, handsome and often very funny on but less funny and less witty than the original. Howard Keel and Katherine Grayson sing and Ann Miller dances in dancing girls.

MARTIN LUTHER There is no more love in a discussion of the sentimental (and sentimental) but it is a good picture which depicts sympathy and love's point of view. The biography of the father of Protestantism is a powerful human document. Look also Neil Armstrong, president of the United States in the future.

THE BLUE LIPS (MGM) Shows John Ford made his story even sentimental Deep South melodrama between the Dixie men and the Negroes. Shows in the great way.

Nature doesn't give shoe soles a double life

... Polymer does!

In recent years a revolution has taken place right under your feet. You see it at your local shoe store where you now find feather-light shoe soles with outstanding wearing qualities. You see it on various types of shoes which are softer and more resilient than any you have ever seen before.

Polysar SS-250, the rubber that has contributed to this shoe-soleing revolution, is just one of the many rubbers made by Polymer to improve the products you use. For inner tubes, Polymer makes Polysar Butyl, a rubber with exceptional air retention.

Polysar latex gives the new rubber-base paints their remarkable odour-free, quick-drying and washable qualities.

Today, scores of products are giving you improved performance because they are made wholly or in part from Polysar.
